

Subscriber choice is too limited/restricted. We subscribe only to "local in local" service because most of what is incorporated in package subscriptions is not content we wish to view. Example: Fox News w/O'Reilly comes in a package with other programming we do not wish to use, but if we opt out of the package we're stuck with local news which is biased to the liberal viewpoint. We should be able to subscribe to a local package, then add any network channel we deem worthwhile for viewing, and not be forced to pay for junk channels we don't and won't watch. These should be added at additional, but minimal charge. For example: I choose to subscribe to local channels for $10.95 and wish to add Fox News for an additional $1.00 - $2.00, and Turner Classic Movies channel for $2.00 - $3.00, or whatever would be a fair market value. It seems to me that this would be a fair approach to sales and not force us to have to pay for programming we don't want in order to get one channel we do want.
